The first theory of productivity was the theory of the factors of production, which grew out of the remains of classical economics in the first half of the 19th century. The principal authors of the theory of the factors of production, J. B. Say and F. Bastiat of France, ascribed the capacity to produce value to the three factors of production—labor, land (as a means of production), and capital.

Productivity describes various measures of the efficiency of production. Often, a productivity measure is expressed as the ratio of an aggregate output to a single input or an aggregate input used in a production process, i.e. output per unit of input, typically over a specific period of time. Most common example is the labour productivity measure, e.g., such as GDP per worker. There are many different definitions of productivity and the choice among them depends on the purpose of the productivi
